The economic downturn has required high technology companies to develop a different skill set than the one which succeeded in economically healthier times. Quality legal representation for these companies has become key to the survival of many struggling through the current economy. Newspapers are filled with new scenarios and legal questions challenging the survival of high tech companies.

WHO SHOULD ATTEND
Attorneys working with or interested in high tech industries and non-attorneys looking to manage today’s economic challenges more effectively will benefit from a broad range of topics including current issues, possibility of bankruptcy, privacy concerns, website protection, IP, tax implications and employment mistakes to be avoided.

This seminar is chaired and presented by highly experienced and talented legal practitioners working with today’s high tech companies and will provide practical information applicable in the current economic climate.
